

The majority of known methods of determination of the structural parameters of porous materials are inapplicable for use as nondestructive methods of continuous inspection of the structure of thin sheets of permeable fiber materials during their production and in finished form. In addition the results of measurements of the structural parameters of permeable materials by different methods differ significantly and there is not a strict correlation between them.

Full article